

María Valentina Villavicencio Blanco

Immigration & Humanitarian Legal Strategist

María Valentina Villavicencio Blanco is a Venezuelan attorney with more than a decade of legal experience and four years of focused professional work supporting individuals navigating the United States immigration system.

Her practice concentrates on humanitarian and protection-based immigration matters, including asylum-related relief, VAWA-based petitions, family-based processes, and detention and bond proceedings.

She holds a Juris Doctor degree in the United States and has completed associate-level academic training in Immigration Law, along with postgraduate coursework in Criminal Law in Venezuela.

Ms. Villavicencio has received Moral Character approval from the State Bar of California and is eligible for admission upon successful completion of the California Bar Examination.

She provides comprehensive procedural and evidentiary support across a broad spectrum of immigration filings, guiding individuals and families through complex legal frameworks involving political persecution, gender-based violence, organized criminal threats, and state-sponsored harm.

In addition to her casework, she has contributed to instructional efforts in human rights and constitutional principles within professional training environments.

As Co-Founder of Iuris Immigration Services, she works in strategic alignment with licensed attorneys to support the advancement and management of immigration and humanitarian matters nationwide.

Ms. Villavicencio holds a Florida Notary Public commission and maintains a Health Insurance license in the State of Texas.

Her work is grounded in due process principles, constitutional protections, and a disciplined commitment to access to justice.
